INSIGHTS FROM THE NEW ADVERTISER PERCEPTIONS STUDY COMMISSIONED BY 4C

Making Audiences Actionable: Envisioning A Frictionless Cross-Channel Advertising Future is a new study of 300 advertising decision makers across the US and the UK commissioned by 4C Insights and Advertiser Perceptions that charts the post-disruption media landscape, from TV to digital to social and mobile. The research highlights how industry players are navigating today's fragmented channels and platforms with an eye towards how audience-based strategies and tools will take planning and buying into a cohesive and measurable future.

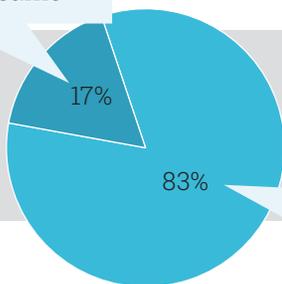

100% of the US Tech/Telco marketers surveyed currently either use cross-channel campaigns (83%) or plan to use them in the next year (17%).

Expect cross-channel budgets to remain the same

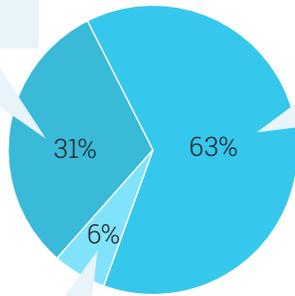

Expect cross-channel budgets to increase

Furthermore, 83% plan to increase their cross-channel advertising budget allocation over the next year.

With regards to improving marketing performance, US Tech/Telco marketers reported that cross-channel audience-based marketing either somewhat or greatly improved key performance indicators (KPIs) such as Brand Loyalty (92%), Brand Awareness (96%) and sales conversions (97%). 96% agreed that this approach also improved target audience reach.

Expect accelerated growth in cross-channel audience-based marketing

Expect steady growth in cross-channel audience-based marketing

Don't expect cross-channel to catch on

When asked about the growth of cross-channel audience buying, 94% of respondents expect to see either steady or accelerated growth over the next 12 months and 87% agree that over the next three years, this marketing approach will surge and make up a larger share of campaigns.
